The diagram illustrates a Hybrid Energy Storage System (HES) architecture. It features four main energy sources: a solar panel (top center) connected to a 'Monitor Platform' (top right) and the HES; a 'Grid' (top left) connected to the HES via an 'AC' line; and a 'Load' (bottom left) connected to the HES via an 'AC' line. The HES itself is represented by a red-bordered box containing four units: two rack-mounted units (left) and two container units (right). The container units are labeled 'DOMINANCE' and show internal battery modules. The rack-mounted units also show internal components. The entire system is labeled 'Energy Storage System' at the bottom.
